He was selected for the EIDE at the age of 11 and participated in three National School Games, of which he won two, and other sporting events that formed him as an athlete.

Carrera deportiva

En enero de 2005 obtuvo la medalla de oro con solo 16 años, en la división de 51 kg, del Campeonato Nacional de Boxeo Playa Girón celebrado en Pinar del Río. En ese primer torneo de la categoría de mayores venció al monarca olímpico Yuriorkis Gamboa, quien tuvo que abandonar por una lesión. También derrotó a Yoandry Salinas y en la final dispuso en un combate de muchos intercambios de Kadel Luis Martínez 27-15. Por esa actuación fue elegido el púgil más combativo del certamen. Cuatro meses después ganó el Torneo Internacional Girardo Córdova Cardín venciendo nuevamente en la final a Kadel Luis.

Ese mismo año hizo su debut internacional en el Campeonato Panamericano de Boxeo en la ciudad de Río de Janeiro, de donde regresó con la presea de bronce, al ceder en semifinales ante el local Helder Gonzaga.

Cockerel Pesos

In 2006, cockerel weights (54 kg) were used as a transit to other higher divisions. In the Girón Beach in Granma, they lost in the semifinals to Idel Torriente and had to settle for third place. At the time, double Olympic monarch Guillermo Rigondeaux was the main figure in that division. In a few months, he was forced to climb six kilograms in order to reach 60 kg, as he would be the Cuban representative at the World Youth Championship in Agadir, Morocco, where he gave a good demonstration by winning the gold medal, facing Azamat Smagulov of Kazakhstan in the final. For the results obtained in 2006, the best Cuban youth athlete was selected.

In the following season, Iglesias was unable to climb to the top of the podium in national tournaments, losing in the final of the Girón Beach of Sancti Spíritus with Yordenis Ugás 8-21. That year he lost twice more to Ugas in his lightweight season. He was unable to beat the 2005 world champion Mianyang in a challenger match (4-9) or in the final of Córdova Cardín in Villa Clara (5-16).

Light - welter

He then continued to gain weight and in 2008 he joined the 64 kg (lightweight-welter) division, where he fought in the Girón Beach Tournament held in Holguín and won the competition by defeating the spirit and incumbent defender Richard Poll by 12-9, becoming from that moment on the best man on the national team in that division.

He became the first man in the light welter division in Cuba. As a boxer he stood out for the technical, combative and correct handling of the right jab in spite of being left-handed, working well the three classic hits: straight, swines and hooks. Due to the results obtained, he was selected in his division to participate in the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games and won a place in the pre-Olympic tournament in Port of Spain, defeating the American Javier Molina.

In the traditional tour of the Cuban boxing team in Europe, he won the gold medal in the Klishko Cup in Ukraine, beating host Dennis Lazarev 11-6. He won silver at the Strandzha Cup in Bulgaria, where he lost to local Boris Georgiev 8-26. Before the 2008 Olympics, he also won the IV Cuban Sports Olympiad against Richard Poll, and the Independence Cup in Santo Domingo against Dominican Félix Manuel Díaz.

In the pre-Olympic predictions, Iglesias was considered one of the favorites to win medals even though he debuted in the Olympic Games. In the semifinals, he was entangled by the provocative boxing of the experienced Thai Manus Boonjumnong, champion of the Olympic Games of Athens 2004, and the judges voted against him 5-10, remaining as bronze medalist. That year he won the Ostrava Grand Prix in the Czech Republic.

At the 2009 Girón Beach, in Guantánamo, he lost first place to Yordenis Ugás, who, by strategy of the National Boxing Commission, had won the Ostrava Grand Prix in the Czech Republic.
